

LETTER FROM THE EDITOR-IN-CHIEF—WINTER 2020

This year has been quite interesting around the world as educators attempt to make the necessary adjustments to teach remotely and to continue their research and publication. They have been quite resourceful and innovative in their efforts and have to be commended for their dedication and devotion. We all benefit from their contributions.

The Winter 2020 Issue of the JOURNAL OF SUSTAINABLE DEVELOPMENT IN AFRICA (JSDA) features five excellent papers that were written, reviewed, and edited under very difficult global conditions made quite cumbersome by the COVID-19 pandemic. The authors and reviewers of these papers deserve all the praise that I, as the editor-in-chief, can summon to express my gratitude and appreciation.

I have written this brief “letter” without mentioning particular papers because I intend to add other papers that are already in the pipeline. The papers will be added to this Issue at a later date.

Please enjoy the articles and we look forward to expanding this Issue as the remaining papers are examined for their appropriateness for the JSDA.

Sincerely

Valentine Udoh James. Ph.D.: CEI, CAQS
Professor of Environmental Management, Planning and Policy
Certified Environmental Inspector
Certified Air Quality Specialist

